

LAW SCHOOL LIFE

JHLS Spring Twilight Affair

The Joseph Henry Lumpkin Society Spring Twilight Affair was graciously hosted by John (J.D.'72) and Sandra Glover. Here, (l. to r.) John and his wife, Sandra, pose for a photo with Cleveland Chair and Meigs Professor Ron Ellington and his wife, Jeannie. Members of the Joseph Henry Lumpkin Society donate $1,000 or more to the law school annually.

Portraits presented to Georgia Law

Friends and alumni often commission portraits of alumni who have distinguished themselves in public service. This spring, former Georgia Gov. Roy E. Barnes (J.D.'72) and former state Attorney General Michael J. Bowers (J.D.'74) were honored in this manner.

Alumni Advocacy Series

Georgia Law is always grateful when alumni return to share their expertise with students. This spring, as part of the well-received Alumni Advocacy Series organized by Callaway Chair Emeritus Ron Carlson (left), Rick Deane (J.D.'77) and Kay Deming (J.D.'78) returned to Athens to discuss "How to Cross-Examine Opposing Experts."

Also, Michael Terry (J.D.'87) and Susan Boleyn (J.D.'76) told students the "ins and outs" of how to brief and argue appeals.

Georgia Law Alumnae Reception

Earlier this year, a gathering was held to help recognize the accomplishments of female graduates of Georgia Law. Pictured with Eleanor Banister (J.D.'80) (right) is Susan Lanigan (J.D.'88), executive vice president and general counsel for Dollar General, who served as the guest speaker. "We are the ones who set the stage for future women lawyers," Lanigan said, citing the increasing numbers of women entering professional programs, including law school. "We are smart and capable of accomplishing great things. We should not let our success get in the way of accomplishing those things." This event was hosted by Susan Jump Wilson (J.D.'89) at the Atlanta office of Alston & Bird.

Midyear State Bar of Georgia Alumni Events

It is always good to catch up with old friends and fellow alumni at the State Bar of Georgia Midyear Meeting alumni events. At the breakfast are Robert Benham (J.D.'70) and Sherry Jackson (J.D.'87). The new slate of Law School Association Council officers for 2007-08 was announced at the morning gathering. The incoming officers include Steve Gilliam (J.D.'74) as president, Henry Tharpe (J.D.'74) as president-elect, Eleanor Banister (J.D.'80) as immediate past-president, Greg Sowell (J.D.'83) as treasurer and David Bell (J.D.'77) as secretary.

At the reception, held at the firm Ellis, Painter, Ratterree & Adams are (l. to r.) Clay Ratterree (J.D.'77), Avant Edenfield (J.D.'58) and Harvey Weitz (LL.B.'66).

Jordan presented with honorary Doctor of Laws

At the UGA undergraduate commencement ceremony, Vernon Jordan was awarded an honorary Doctor of Laws, which after an earned doctorate is the highest recognition UGA can bestow. At the ceremony, the well-respected lawyer and civil rights advocate gratefully accepted the honor as "a tribute to the fortitude and perseverance of all those whose sacrifices and triumphs nearly half a century ago compelled this nation and this state and this university to honestly face their past, present and future so that this nation, this state and this university could have a chance to forge a future full of accomplishment and hope and service to a widening democracy." 2008 Alumni Reunions

During calendar year 2008, classes graduating from Georgia Law in a year ending in a three or an eight will celebrate an anniversary year reunion. Reunion parties may be scheduled by contacting the Office of Alumni Programs at (706) 542-5190 or jbirch@uga.edu.

Anyone interested in serving on a reunion party planning committee for their class is welcome. Typically, the earlier a class begins planning their reunion, the better the attendance is from their classmates.

Join the fun and reconnect with your fellow alumni!

Georgia Law Development Report

One of the best aspects of development work is the chance to meet new people each and every day – a law student studying in the lounge; a new member of the faculty settling into his or her office; an alum working in his or her office in Valdosta, Macon or Atlanta; a supporter coming back to attend Awards Day.

During these conversations and exchanges, each member of the development staff has a chance to better understand the impact of this law school on a very personal level.

We learn how Georgia Law has shaped people's lives, and we, in turn, talk about the way you, alumni and friends, can further enhance the lives of others through your continued financial support of the law school.

We invite you to read about those we have met with during recent months who have decided to invest in the law school's future.

Please join us in thanking them for their generosity and vision of academic excellence.

Angie Fitts Marshall made a $1 million commitment to honor her late husband, Justice Thomas O. Marshall Jr. (LL.B.'48). This gift will create the Thomas O. Marshall Jr. Chair in Constitutional Law. In conversations with Mrs. Marshall and members of her family, it was clear that building an endowment to support a faculty chair was the best way to honor the memory of Justice Marshall and his commitment to excellence in the legal profession.

A major gift was directed to the law school by Bruce Kirbo (J.D.'51) and members of the Thomas and Irene Kirbo Trust Board for $125,000 (with an additional pledge of $75,000). This gift and pledge brings the Kirbo Trust's total campaign gift to $1 million. Bruce and the board have strategically supported the Kirbo Trust Endowed Faculty Enhancement Fund, which provides funding for endeavors that promote legal research and scholarly dialogue.

We are pleased to acknowledge a commitment by John T. Glover (J.D.'72) and his son, John T. Glover Jr. (J.D.'92), through the Glover Family Foundation, to endow the newly established C. Ronald Ellington Faculty Award for Excellence in Teaching. This award recognizes Professor Ellington's dedication and commitment to excellence in the classroom and will be awarded annually to the faculty member selected by the Student Bar Association for outstanding teaching.

We also want to thank John (J.D.'72) and Sandra Glover for hosting our Joseph Henry Lumpkin Society Spring Twilight Affair (for annual donors of $1,000 or more) this past April.

Serving on the law school's Board of Visitors has brought Kathelen Amos (J.D.'82) in close contact with the school in recent months. Kathelen, along with her husband, Dan, have chosen to make a $100,000 unrestricted gift in honor of Dean Rebecca White's vision for Georgia Law.

In addition to these major gifts, the law school continues to seek support for the law school's annual fund. The Law School Fund is the backbone of financial support for the school's yearly operational budget. Alumni contributions support a wide range of areas, but mostly it supports students. More than 65 percent of the Law School Fund is spent on student needs.

We are delighted to have so many of our alumni serving as class and reunion agents this year – in their volunteer role of telling their story about the law school and encouraging others to give back to their legal alma mater.

Our current fund-raising campaign, Archway to Excellence, will provide a solid financial foundation for the law school's future.

With only one year remaining, we have reached our $17 million goal, and we are well positioned for the successful conclusion of this important effort.

Along with the generous gifts we have mentioned above, it is important to remember that each and every gift plays a role in Georgia Law's success.

The Office of Development would like to continue to meet with alumni and friends of the Georgia Law community and explore why the law school should be a philanthropic priority. We look forward to seeing you soon.

Elizabeth Brannen Chandler: Managing municipal law

After working in the private sector and for a public company, Elizabeth “Beth” Brannen Chandler (J.D. ’88) has settled into municipal law in her new position as city attorney for the City of Atlanta. Always interested in the corporate side of the law and the problem solving aspect, Chandler found herself in a variety of legal capacities before making her way to her current job.

Following a 12-year career at Troutman Sanders, she worked for Mirant Corporation for six years, where she was assistant general counsel and corporate secretary, and was responsible for governance, compliance and ethics within the organization.

While she was not involved in the initial development of the compliance and ethics program after Mirant spun off from Southern Company in early 2001, she was constantly busy updating the program after the organization fell into bankruptcy. She also advised the Mirant board on governance and securities matters.

In fact, Chandler’s work at Mirant serves as a model for other organizations in crisis. “We sort of lived in crisis for several years – experiencing everything from SEC and Department of Justice investigations to credit downgrades, governance reforms, bankruptcy and ultimately management and board changes. We didn’t know how to operate in a normal mode,” Chandler said.

However, all of this hard work helped prepare her for her newest challenge as city attorney. She is working on getting up to speed on all of the issues currently facing the City of Atlanta. According to Chandler, it is a timely process because instead of simply being updated as developments occur, she must receive all of the background information as well.

One immediate goal she has for the Department of Law is to dispel any misconceptions that Atlanta residents may have about her office. “I think there’s a lack of understanding about the breadth of services we provide to the city,” Chandler said. “I think mostly people aren’t sure of the role, when it really is similar to an in-house legal function of a very large company – constantly in the public eye.”

Chandler reports to both Mayor Shirley Franklin and the Atlanta City Council. With the expanse of issues the city covers, she focuses on choosing specific projects to get more deeply involved in.

As city attorney, she is responsible for managing litigation against the city, advising all city departments and managing the Department of Law. “I inherited a terrific staff, delegating and allowing them to handle matters so that I’m not over committing myself is the goal,” she said.

Looking forward to her position for the remainder of Franklin’s term, Chandler cites the numerous exciting projects that Franklin has in mind for Atlanta as one of the reasons that drew her to the position. Franklin has been successful in partnering the business community with public and private organizations to help Atlanta grow and thrive.

“Her commitment to open and honest government, given my background in compliance and ethics, attracted me to the position,” Chandler said.

While she is enjoying her new post at the helm of one of the South’s largest cities, she still gets time away amidst her hectic schedule to spend time with her two sons. “I still watch a lot of Little League Baseball and Georgia football.”

Chris J. Hoofnagle: Exposing privacy law

For the seemingly open Chris J. Hoofnagle (J.D.'00), privacy is a huge issue. It is at the heart of what he teaches his law students at the University of California-Berkeley School of Law's Samuelson Law, Technology & Public Policy Clinic.

This consumer privacy law guru imparts his own brand of legal expertise in his clinical classes with projects ranging from privacy to free speech to civil liberties where they accept "real world" projects based on students' interest and for the potential to influence public policy.

His favorite aspect of the job is his interaction with students because, according to Hoofnagle, they are remarkably committed and "own" the projects. The harder part comes as he continually works on developing a positive strategy for addressing the tough issues surrounding privacy law.

"It is difficult to develop an agenda designed to shape the law to reduce the collection of personal information, to give individuals more dignity and to prevent the creation of a scarlet letter society," Hoofnagle commented.

Hoofnagle also enjoys the collaborative atmosphere at his current university. His students have the opportunity to work closely with their peers from other departments like information science, engineering, psychology and computer science to complement their legal focus. According to Hoofnagle, the multidisciplinary approach provides the students with a richer perspective on how to address policy matters.

Since his experience as an undergraduate volunteering in Georgia Law's Legal Aid and Defender Clinic, Hoofnagle has always been interested in privacy law. "Privacy is a necessary condition for living an autonomous life, one reasonably free from social control by the government and, increasingly, by the intrusion of commercial interests," he said.

He is currently working on a proposal he claims would dramatically reduce the threat of identity theft. The proposal would require banks to publicly report incidences of identity theft resulting in more informed consumers who can then select their banking institution based on the relative risk of identity theft.

"With enough information, we could actually have competition to reduce the severity and prevalence of identity theft," Hoofnagle said.

However, Hoofnagle also does not think the public should be scared of invasions of privacy. He agrees that in many ways, we have more privacy today than a century ago and that threats to personal autonomy come from both the government and the private sector. "Under current conceptions of the Fourth Amendment, revealing information to a business is just as risky as revealing it to the government," he said.

Updating privacy law is another issue Hoofnagle hopes to tackle in the future. He sees the need to re-conceptualize privacy law to bring it into modern times.

"I would bring more rationality to it by helping courts understand that in a database society, one cannot equate secrecy with privacy, because nothing is truly secret anymore. Even the most sensitive facts about an individual are stored somewhere in a medical or educational database."

In his free time, Hoofnagle writes a blog that addresses "denialism," rhetorical techniques used by libertarian groups to derail social justice efforts. He hopes these and other efforts will lead him to a new professional destination, possibly in Manhattan. "I need to find a job that allows me to go to Zabar's (a gourmet food shop) every morning."

Steve C. Jones: Advocating for a better tomorrow

Steve C. Jones (J.D.'88) possesses a passion for his community that is evident to all who know him.

"I've lived in Athens all my life, grew up in Athens. It's a good town, and I wanted to be a part of it," Jones, who is a Western Circuit Superior Court judge, said when asked why he remained in Athens after law school.

Now Jones is in a prime position to leave a lasting mark on his community. In December 2005, he was approached by the mayor of Athens to take on the daunting task of becoming the chairperson of the city's newest anti-poverty initiative, Partners for a Prosperous Athens. After accepting the offer, his duties included working with a steering committee to ensure the entire group remained on task to identify problem areas and to deliver positive recommendations on how to reduce poverty in Athens-Clarke County, the rate of which is currently at a staggering 28 percent.

Stressing the importance of involving those who poverty affects most in the development process, Jones feels strongly that the committee's recommendations will make a difference and is moving onto the next step – fund raising.

"As a judge, I can't ask anybody for money, but I will work to make sure the OneAthens Foundation (a newly created group to oversee the accountability and implementation of PPA's recommendations) is formally and properly put together," he said.

For his extensive efforts on this project and his overall sense of community pride, Jones was featured on CNN in a segment that aired in February, during Black History Month. According to Jones, a camera crew captured his every move from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. one day. During that time, he handled cases in the courtroom, visited with UGA's President Michael F. Adams and jetted around to his favorite hometown locales.

Jones does all he can in Athens to ensure his community is thriving. He is a member of numerous civic organizations and is a deacon at his church. "You have to be involved and be the full person," Jones said.

This Athens native admits that his passion for helping others also helps him to do his best in the courtroom. "Most people see judges as only putting people in jail. Instead, I think the main thing is that we really have the authority to place people in situations that can help them," he stated.

With the help of two other superior court judges, Jones started a felony drug court in the Western Circuit to help stave off recidivism. The trio recognized that locking up addicts was not the solution to the problem because they emerged from prison with the same addiction. Now, the judges can order someone into a rehabilitation program to get help and hopefully prevent re-entrance into the system.

Jones acknowledges the heaviness of the decisions he makes daily, which is why he reviews each decision, ensuring time to correct a mistake. He also acknowledges the major role a judge plays in the life of a person who is standing before the court.

"I think when a judge is trying to do the best he can, he can do a lot of positive things for a person."
