

Examples of How To Handle Common Resume Entries:

Click on the links below to see examples of how to handle common resume entries:

1. Two addresses
  - a. If you wish to include two addresses on your resume, e.g. your current address in Athens and a permanent non-Athens address to show a geographic connection to a particular employer, you can do so by putting one on the left hand side and one on the right hand side as demonstrated by the example.
2. GPA and class rank
  - a. In general, if your GPA is 3.0 or above you will likely want to include it. If your class rank is top 50% or above, you will probably want to include that as well.
  - b. Note that first year law students do not receive a GPA or class rank until the end of the second semester, and therefore, 1Ls should not include GPA or class rank on their resumes until then. After the first semester, however, 1Ls can list grades in the courses for which they receive official, final grades. For an example of this, click here.
3. Class rank close to a rank cutoff
  - a. If you wish to show that your GPA was close to a rank cutoff, you can do so by listing the official rank cutoffs issued by the registrar as demonstrated in the example above.
4. Journal participation
5. Published journal note
6. Published article \(non-law journal\)
7. Study abroad
8. Double undergraduate major
9. Undergraduate minor
10. Clinical experience referenced both in “Activities” and “Experience” sections
11. Different titles held at different times at the same employer
12. Non-professional experience
  - a. If you do not yet have significant professional experience, you can include non-professional jobs as a regular job entries in your experience section. When possible, try to focus on any responsibilities that called upon professional level skills, such as managing a shift at a restaurant, handling finance related duties (e.g., reconciling receipts or handling bookkeeping duties), training other staff, preparing reports, etc.
  - b. If you do have significant professional experience, but want to refer to your non-professional jobs for some reason (e.g., to show that you supported yourself financially throughout college at the same time you performed well academically), you can include it in summary fashion in the “Additional Information” section of your resume. Click here to see an example.
